

Date: 10/5/2016 9:33:46 PM

Subject: Postcard

On the road again.

Just south of town we drove into a fogbank. From which we did not emerge until halfway through Kansas. But as abruptly as it had begun, the fog ended, we drove into perfect weather, ate lunch at Fort Larned, and cruised to La Junta in time for supper.

And in La Junta...

We had bought this cooler a few years ago because it looked classy. For an ice chest, that is.

Today the top liner disengaged from the inner foam insulation.

Luckily we knew exactly what to do: Duct tape! Perfect! Of course we're in La Junta Colorado. There is no Walmart, no Home Depot, no Staples, not even a local hardware. So we searched the entire La Junta Safeway (that takes 3 minutes) and we found some. In the school aisle. Our choices were pink, white, neon green, Batman and snake skin. At that point we were grateful for white.

Still classy.
Ya think?

S&D

PS – Some of you are thinking, maybe a lot of you are thinking, OK virtually all of you are thinking – you went on a road trip without duct tape?? Well of course we had duct tape. We don't even go to the mall without duct tape. But on reflection we figured ours was probably 15 years old and we opted for new. So chill.

postcardsfromthesouthwest.com